Potter Saves Stone

Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry student Harry Potter has triumphed over He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named for a second time. The infamous 11 year old yesterday saved the Philosopher's Stone from the clutches of You-Know-Who in a dungeon below Hogwarts.

"Harry has done the school, and me, proud with this latest event," Albus Dumbledore stated. "This, by no means though, was intended when the Stone was placed in protection at Hogwarts."

Harry was helped by fellow first year friends Hermione Granger and Ronald Weasley, but was alone when he came face to face with He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named. Harry and You-Know-Who are said to have duelled, in which Harry won. It is unknown what sort of mortal state You-Know-Who was in, but he fled the scene unnoticed. Harry was unavailable for comment, as he is still unconscious in the Hospital Wing at Hogwarts, but is expected to make a full recovery.

This is the first the magic community has heard of He-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named in many years, and it has sparked worry among many. Cornelius Fudge this morning made comment that "You-Know-Who is no where near return. This is not a cause for concern. The Ministry has everything under complete control."

Flamel to Pass in Few Days

Nicholas and Perenelle Flamel have confirmed that they will indeed pass away after the Philosopher's Stone was yesterday destroyed. Nicholas, a great friend of Albus Dumbledore and one of the wizarding world's greatest alchemists, created the Stone, which contains the Elixir of Life. Nicholas, 665 and Perenelle, 658, have lived on the Elixir of Life, which makes the drinker immortal, for their lengthy lives. The couple have insisted that they are happy with this result, and look forward to life after death.
